Evidence from human experimental studies. One of the first studies comparing the psychomimetic effects of THC and CBD in humans was performed by Perez-Reyes et al. (1973). The investigators showed that compared to THC and cannabidiol, CBD did not produce any psychological or physiological effects described as feeling "high". BishopBlog I'm not one of those people who thinks all politicians are corrupt and evil. Undoubtedly such cases exist, and psychopaths often thrive in the kind of highly competitive context of politics, where you need a thick skin and a determination to succeed. The contribution of cannabis use to variation in the ... Differences in frequency of daily cannabis use and in use of high-potency cannabis contributed to the striking variation in the incidence of psychotic disorder across the 11 studied sites. Given the increasing availability of high-potency cannabis, this has important implications for public health. The effects of handwriting experience on functional brain ...
